Formerly books that were listed a $1.50 were sold to dealers for sums ranging from $1.10 to 89 cents, thus allowing a wide margin for discounts. Some of the large stores have bought n large quantities, paying as low as 89 cents for a book and then selling ; for 87 cents, making up the loss b the sale of other articles.

Such methods were disastrous to the merchant who kept a small book store. If the proprietor of a large store shall hereafter violate the agreement and sell below the listed price he will be cut off by all the publishers and can obtain no more books.

At the same time the public, it is said, will be benefited. They will be an-sured of a uniform price which will average about the same as the price they have heretofore been paying for standard books.
